PHENOMENA OF THE ELEMENTS .- On Tuesday, while the remains of the late King were en route for the tomb at Kawaiahao, a heavy thunder storm passed over this city, -some of the claps would have done honor to the locality of Cape Hatteras, famed for the superiority of its thunder and lightning. And on the same day, in the channel between Cahu and Kausi, several large and perfect water-spouts were seen. All of which, say the more superstitious of the natives, had some mysterious connection with BORING FOR WATER .- We learn that it is the intention of the purchaser of the Waikapu property to commence at once prospecting for water there, for the purpose of irrigation. No doubt is entertained of the existence in that neighborhood of abundant supplies of water at various distances beneath the surface, which when found will be brought up with the aid of pumps driven by windmills. We may expect to see a great change in the appearance of Waikapu a year or two hence. At 1 A. M. Tuesday morning, the Wailuku Brass Band arrived from over the mountain and blew their way into town, through the town and all over the guns and the bells had already awakened. By this time the streets were full of people, young, old and middle-aged, enjoying the fresh night-air under the brightest of full-moons, chatting, hallooing, hurrals contributions of pigs, fowls, lunu &c. for the coming

LONDON, October 15th, 1875. At the meeting of the British Association, in the Anthropological section, the Rev. Wyatt Gill, who has lived upwards of twenty years in the Hervey Islands, combated Mr. Wallace's theory of the origin of the Polynesians. Mr. Gill holds, that the present race entered the Pacific from the south-east fork of New Guines, but were driven eastward by the fierce Negrito race. The greatest distance from land to land, which they would have to travel in their eastward passage, would be from Samos to the Hervey group, a distance of only about 700 miles. Mr. Gill will also shortly publish a book on the " Songe and Myths of the South Pacific," with a preface by

Max. Muller, the celebrated linguist. From the report of the Board of the Protection of the Australian Aborigines, it appears that there are at present but 1558 natives alive in Victoria. About one-third of them live on the sig stations under the control of the Board, while the remainder still wander about the banks of the Murray, but are also supplied with clothing, food and medicine.
